What makes an effective HWB?

- understanding population needs and the resources in an area
- committed shared leadership
- investing time in developing relationships
- working across different planning, commissioning and delivery footprints
- clarity of role for the parts of the system and how they fit together
- ability to demonstrate impact

What makes an effective HWB?

“Effective health and wellbeing boards are true partnerships”

“A combination of public meetings and development sessions in private are invaluable to build effective relationships...”

“JHWSs provide the overall strategic vision and priorities for health care and wellbeing. They are often described as the glue that joins the partnership together.”

---

“Nonetheless, they (HWBs) counsel against underestimating the difficulties of developing integration across NHS organisations and councils, which have very different cultures, governance and accountability.”
